WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 13.

HOW TO WRITE AN AGREEABLE STYLE.—Dryden found himself one day after a dinner party in company with the Duke of Buckingham, Lord Rochester and Lord Dorset. The conversation turned upon the English language, on the harmony of numbers and the elegance of style, which merits each of the three lords believed himself to possess in the highest degree. After a good deal of disputing it was determined to refer the matter to Dryden. The poet was to consist in each writing an article on the last subject that presented itself, and the pieces of paper having been placed under the candlestick, Dryden was to draw them out and determine which was the best. The three lords set to work, and while Rochester and Buckingham were exerting their brains to invent some sparkling epigram or happy turn of thought, Dryden read: "On the first day of next May I will pay to John Dryden, or order, the sum of five hundred pounds sterling, value received. April 15, 1686. (Signed) DORSET." Lord Rochester and the Duke of Buckingham confessed that they could not write like that, and that Lord Dorset's style was the best they had ever heard of.
